

Rebecca Buringrud received her Bachelors in Music degree at the University of California, Los Angeles, where she there specialized in trombone performance and studied with Los Angeles Philharmonic Trombonist, James Miller. She is now currently attending Arizona State University to receive her Masters in Music degree, specializing in trombone performance under the direction of Trombone Educator, Dr. Brad Edwards.

While living in Los Angeles, Rebecca taught private trombone lessons and worked a handful of studio recording gigs, including recording on a new album for famous DJ/Electronic producer, Deadmau5. Opportunities like this have inspired her to continue on pursuing her passion for a career in music.

Music has always been a big part of Rebecca's life, and that included the influence she gained from going to Donner Mine Music Camp as a kid. DMMC holds a special place in her heart and acts as a reminder of how music continuously brings people together throughout our lives.

When she is not playing trombone, you can find Rebecca practicing yoga, as she also hopes to be a Yoga instructor some day in the near future.

I forgot how long/short/detailed you like these to be! If this is way too long (and longer than everyone else's, 'cause that would be weird) please feel free to cut the part where it goes from "While living in Los Angeles.....passion for a career in music."

Thanks! :)
